The American Literature Society of Japan Copyright Policy

1 The American Literature Society of Japan (ALSJ) holds the copyright to all articles published in the journals of the society, Studies in American Literature and The Journal of the American Literature Society of Japan. ALSJ holds rights to publish, copy, or republish articles in any medium.

2 Authors of the articles may reprint their articles on printing medium with the written permission of ALSJ. Acknowledgement of publication in the ALSJ journals must be given.

3 Permission to reprint or post materials online will be granted to the authors under the following conditions:
   3.1 The “online” media may include writers’ personal Web pages, the Web pages of the institutions to which they belong, or the Web pages of research fund organizations.
   3.2 Copyright notice must appear on the first page.
   3.3 The page must be linked to the page of original online publication.
   3.4 Permission will be granted one year after the original publication of the journals.

4 Materials to be published or posted online must retain the original form published in the journals. The authors may choose either of the following:
   4.1 The authors may use a scanned copy of the materials.
   4.2 The authors may use electric files on the pages of J-STAGE.