The authors should not have violated the physical well-being, human rights, or privacy of the contacts and informants that contributed to the field data and research upon which the paper was based as well as the content matter of the paper. The authors shall bear the entire responsibility of complying with the letter and spirit of all domestic and international laws, as well as treaties of the relevant nations including Japan, such as those regarding the access to and benefit-sharing of the residents' genetic resources of nations where the research was conducted. The author(s) can clarify these points in the ETHICS STATEMENT to be placed between the main text and the ACKNOWLEDGMENTS. The editorial board will reserve the right to ask the authors to submit the relevant memoranda and valid documentary evidence to confirm the above.
